

Public matters - February 2019

This month includes Google's GDPR breach, what constitutes a 'highway', a procurement case, trial of facts, and the Modern Slavery Act.

13 February 2019

Welcome to our Public Matters Newsletter.

This month we have:

Google penalised €50m for GDPR breach

The first major financial penalty of €50m (£44m) has been imposed on Google for GDPR breach – what does this mean for you?

Read more

London Borough of Southwark and another v Transport for London - Supreme Court decision

The Court of Appeal case of London Borough of Southwark and the City of London v Transport for London centred on the transfer of 'highways' to Transport for London and what constituted a 'highway.' Kassra Powles reviews the recent Supreme Court judgment.

Read more

MEAT methodology examined in recent case: Proximus v Council [2019]

Olivia Watkinson summarises the recent procurement case of Proximus v Council and what it means for you.

Read more

When the accused can't stand trial?

There are many situations whereby after a criminal investigation has started, an accused individual can no longer stand trial. Laura Broadhead looks at when this might happen and when a trial of facts may be used.

Read more

Modern Slavery Act 2015 – latest developments

Momentum is gathering in the call to take a tougher approach to how large businesses tackle modern slavery issues in their supply chains. Emma Grant and Raymond Silverstein look at the latest developments.

Read more

a.more-b { padding-right: 30px; background: url('https://www.brownejacobson.com/Content/bj/themes/default/images/arrow-menu.png') right center no-repeat; color: #b30838; }

Contact

Kassra Powles

Partner

kassra.powles@brownejacobson.com

+44 (0)115 908 4806

Related expertise

Services

Dispute resolution and litigation

Public procurement