Lydia is a senior associate in our Birmingham office, with extensive experience in defending health professionals. Since joining Browne Jacobson in 2014 (after qualifying in 2012), Lydia has developed a significant and varied practice; dealing with high value, high profile and complex cases.

Lydia leads a team of lawyers specialising in legal advice for the ambulance and urgent care sector.

Lydia's practice places great emphasis on building positive and supportive relationships with her clients. She has undertaken secondments in order to build an understanding of what clients want and to ensure that the work has a grounding in both legal excellence and first hand 'on the ground' experience.

Lydia has played a key role in a departmental project to find better ways of working with those Claimant firms we regularly deal with. This has enabled us to build much better connections resulting in excellent working relationships, reduced costs and improved outcomes.
