Camile is a Trainee Solicitor at the firms Birmingham Office.

Camile's journey within the legal profession is both inspiring and impactful, reflecting her dedication to her career and her commitment to fostering diversity and inclusion.

As a Trainee Solicitor at the firm, Camile has gained valuable experience across various legal sectors, including Clinical Negligence in Obstetrics. She is currently in her Second Seat in Employment Law, where she does Clinical Negligence, Education, and corporate work. Her versatility and commitment are evident in her ability to work effectively across the Employment Team, contributing significantly to the firm's operations.

Beyond her professional achievements, Camile plays a pivotal role in promoting diversity and inclusion within the legal community. Her involvement in the firm's REACH programme is a testament to her dedication to this cause. The programme, which focuses on mentoring black individuals from low socio-economic backgrounds aspiring for careers in law, has seen considerable success.

Camile's journey from being a mentee who secured a training contract through the programme to becoming a mentor herself is a powerful example of how targeted initiatives can create meaningful opportunities and foster a more inclusive environment. For the past two years, Camile has been mentoring individuals on the REACH programme, leveraging her experiences and insights to guide others. Her work not only supports the professional growth of mentees but also contributes to bridging the diversity gap in the legal profession. Camile's story is a clear illustration of the positive impact that dedicated individuals can have on their organisations and the broader community, making her a role model for aspiring legal professionals.
